

Linux.org Releases New Standards

Contributed by Webmaster
Tuesday, 10 April 2007
Last Updated Thursday, 27 March 2008

The Linux Foundation has released a new Linux Standard Base, a set of programming standards that assure software compatibility with Linux. "All the moving parts are coming together to give the Linux ecosystem its first testing framework that will coordinate development of upstream code to standards and downstream implementations," said Linux Foundation director Jim Zemlin in a release.

See the full story here...